PANEL DISCUSSION: Challenges & Opportunities in EE

Given the state of the world, some might consider environmental education more important now than ever before and your insight on the field is important! Whether you're a seasoned veteran or just starting out, EEAC invites you to bring your perspective and questions to this engaging panel discussion on the challenges and opportunities in the field of environmental education.

The panel offers diverse perspectives on EE through the lens of non-profit work, government agencies, and political advocacy:

- Brock Adler - Environmental educator and leader in advocating for the field. He has led/co-led the North American Association for Environmental Education's (NAAEE) Advocacy Committee for almost ten years
- Sean Abbott-Klafter - Teacher at the High School for Environmental Studies (HSES) and Co-Executive Director of the Friends of HSES
- Rasheed Hislop - Graduate of HSES, working for New York City Department of Parks and Recreation
- Richard Santangelo - Program Director for Audubon New York's "For the Birds" program that connects NYC youth to birds and birding opportunities across the five boroughs
- Brittany DiLeo - Regional Environmental Educator for New York State Department of Environmental Conservation

NETWORK

Open to all. EEAC will also provide a brief update on organizational progress made this year and members will be invited to vote on incoming Steering Committee members.

Network with the panelists and other attendees before and after the discussion. Wine and light refreshments are available.
