

Young Professionals: The Solid Waste and Recycling Industry's Rising Stars

BOLTON LANDING, NY – Young Professional networking opportunities abound at the Federation of New York Solid Waste Associations' Conference and Trade Show at The Sagamore on May 20 through the 23, 2018.

Millennials will not want to miss the "EP Download to YP Upload" event that was heavily attended at the 2017 conference. Experienced Professionals (EPs) have years of regulatory, engineering, product and operations insight to share. Young Professionals (YPs) are yearning to find out what does and does not work in an industry that they see evolving from solid waste to resource management. This opportunity to network with both seasoned and new professionals is sure to be a highlight of the 2018 conference.

Young professional Lauren Laibach began working with the Federation in 2012 as a college intern, helping to compile Exhibitor and Sponsor information for the conference program. After graduating college and becoming a consultant in the field of sustainable materials management, her role with the conference expanded to include researching potential new exhibitors and working with the committee that reviews and selects abstracts for the technical program.

"Becoming involved with the Federation through conference planning during college was a great way for me to network with industry leaders in the sustainable materials management field. Now as a young professional in the industry, I continue to grow my network and connections in the environmental field through my work with Federation." To view the full technical session agenda visit <https://conference.nyfederation.org/program-2/at-a-glance/>