

The Importance of Training

Correct Installations Matter

At D.S. Brown, we believe today's construction worker must take some "time off" from the jobsite to understand what he or she is being asked to do. There is always something new being added to the job—whether it's new tools, methods or technology. Training is the key to making a successful transition so everyone is on board with new methods or materials.

In recent months, training at our facility has included mixing and pouring Delcrete® MD into a blockout, installing a strip seal gland into a Steelflex rail using our Strip Sealer Installation tool and placing a V-Seal in a mockup of a joint blockout. In April, we hosted a training session on our Delastic® Pavement Seals and Delpatch™ Elastomeric Concrete products. The training covered how to successfully install both products through a combination of classroom instruction and hands-on installation demos.

Training may seem like a time-waster because nothing is being "achieved" at the moment. But the payoff can be quickly realized. With properly installed products and higher productivity, your firm becomes known for delivering results and employing workers who are at the top of their game.

Properly trained construction workers are known to be safe and efficient. When a company participates in training offered by D.S. Brown, we know their employees will install our products correctly and continue to follow proper installation methods on a daily basis. Costly mistakes then become less likely, and everyone is safer because there is no guesswork involved—the team will know what to do at every step.

With an accurate and efficient installation process, productivity is increased. Not only does it take less time when workers understand what they are doing, but the increased confidence gained through the training also improves the quality of the work. We also don't want to just leave our products with you. It's up to us to see that you and your team understand every part of our products and the installation process.

Your team can give your company an advantage over the competition when time is invested in their training. The skills your workers learn today will help you beat the competition tomorrow. Contact us today for information on how to schedule training for your team.
