Reflection from Father Jason

Jesus tells us that when we are asked a question, we should make our answer either a simple yes or no. “Let your word be “Yes, Yes” or “No, No”; anything more than this comes from the evil one,” (Matthew 5:37).

Saying I can’t do something somehow absolves me of any wrongdoing or guilt. I would much rather tell a panhandler that I don’t have any money or that I can’t help him, instead of saying that I won’t help him, or following Jesus’ advice, simply saying, “No.” To say that I won’t help him makes me feel guilty, especially because Jesus also tells us to give to all that beg (Matthew 5:42), and saying “No” seems hard and cruel. And maybe that’s the point - it feels hard and cruel because it is. This is where the justification for saying “no” comes in - why it’s right and good to tell a panhandler no, because otherwise she will just keep panhandling. We shouldn’t reward deviant behavior, and besides, she’s just going to use it for drugs or alcohol. Every day we say that we can’t do things, when the truth is that we won’t do them. Sometimes we have good reasons for not doing them - if Neville invites me out for beers at 7:00 on a school night, instead of saying I can’t go, I should be able to say no, I’ll be helping my wife put our kids to bed. Or better yet, if Neville and I are good friends with a shared faith in Christ, I should be able to say, “No,” and that would be the end of the story. Neville would respect the very clear boundary I set down, and we would find another time/way to hang out. But too often, that’s not how it happens; when we say no or that we won’t, we’re asked why, and challenged, and boundaries are totally ignored. Peer pressure doesn’t stop in high school. Which is why it’s easier to say we can’t - that we are stopped by the laws of physics and time from doing whatever it is we’ve been asked to do, leaving no room for argument.

But we do ourselves a disservice by saying we can’t, when what we mean is that we won’t. We are able to make our answer yes, yes, or no, no - and if someone crosses the boundary we’ve made, we can walk away. When we say we can’t we are being dishonest with the person we’re talking to and ourselves, and it’s the latter that’s more damaging. Saying we can’t sets up certain patterns of thinking and shapes our relationship with the world and with God. I hate telling God I won’t do what I’m commanded to do, and so it’s much easier to tell myself that I can’t. But in doing so, I miss an opportunity to grow in faith. When I tell God that I won’t - forgive, forget, help - whatever the case may be, I feel incredibly guilty, because I know that I can do those things, it’s just hard and uncomfortable. Which is why God calls on us to ask Him and each other for help. In our baptismal covenant, every promise we make has the caveat, “I will, with God’s help.” The community is asked if they will do all in their power to help the baptized grow in his/her life in Christ, to which we reply, “We will.” We aren’t created to live out God’s word by ourselves - we can’t. In order to do it we need God’s help, and we need each other. When I tell God that I won’t forgive, or help, or live as we are called to live, it brings me up short. I don’t want to tell God no—it’s God, who created and redeemed me, who actively leads and loves me. When I allow myself to be in that space of total honesty and vulnerability, I realize that it is only with God’s help that I can live as we are called to live - but to get to that space I have to be honest with both God and myself. Let us make our answer, to each other and ourselves, yes, yes, or no, no.

From the Senior Warden

A huge thank you, St. Paul's for all your hard work to make our May Luncheon and Bake Sale a success. A special appreciation goes to Bubba Tom Wolford for his generous donation of the BBQ and Boston Butts. We grossed over $11,000 this year. After expenses along with the profit from last year, the Vestry voted to give SPES, our biggest outreach program, a gift of over $10,000 to support their growing needs.

This coming Sunday, June 5th, is Pentecost Sunday. After the 10:30 service please join us in the courtyard for a hotdog picnic. Many thanks to Coco Fenstermacher for sharing her artistic abilities and providing our table centerpieces.

Starting on Monday, June 13, St. Paul's joins with First United Methodist Church for Vacation Bible School. If you have a child to sign up, or if you wish to volunteer your help, please contact Pam Rhea at St. Paul's Church.

Enjoy your summer!

Marian Hazard, Sr. Warden
