

Reflection

I added this to my Work of Christmas list. I had a co worker once, who when speaking about an upcoming election said, "It matters not. God is in charge." I thought about it for quite some time. In one sense it gave me a sense of peace, but it was a false peace. Something did not sit right. Yes, God is in charge, but we are his hands and feet on this earth.

I am certainly not promoting any more political zealots. We have way too much of that. But I am insisting perhaps, that we are called to be his Kingdom on earth. We need to shine that light, His light, to all around. I need to be intentional about it. I need to be aware that my actions and speech do matter. They make a difference- for good or for evil.

God loves this broken world. He sent His only Son to it-to save us all. He is counting on us to continue that mission that His son began.
