

Studio163 Opens Its Doors as Toronto's New Hub for Inclusive and Diverse Music Creation.

A safe, state-of-the-art studio empowers artists of all genres, genders, and backgrounds to create fearlessly.

Studio163 is Toronto's first fully inclusive recording studio, prioritizing accessibility and representation. Founded in 2024, its mission is to amplify marginalized voices and provide resources for artists to thrive. The studio partners with local LGBTQ+ organizations, BIPOC collectives, and mental health advocates to ensure a holistic support system for its community.

Studio163, a groundbreaking recording studio designed to foster inclusivity and diversity in music, is thrilled to announce its official opening at 163 Queen Street East, Toronto.

Founded on the belief that creativity thrives in safe, welcoming spaces, Studio163 empowers artists of all genres, genders, and cultural backgrounds to express themselves freely and collaborate without barriers.

A Space for Everyone

Studio163 offers cutting-edge recording technology, production tools, and a judgment-free environment where artists can focus on their craft. From hip-hop producers to classical vocalists, podcasters to experimental sound designers, the studio caters to creators at every stage of their journey. Key features include:

- State-of-the-art recording booths
- Mixing suites equipped with industry-standard gear.
- Flexible workspaces: for solo artists, bands, and collaborative projects.
- Mentorship programs: connecting emerging talent with seasoned professionals.
- Affordable rates
- Scholarships for underrepresented creators.

"Studio163" was born from a need to break down exclusivity in the music industry," says George Flowers, founder of Studio163. "We're not just a studio—we're a community. Here, your identity and artistry are celebrated, not sidelined. Whether you're laying down your first track or producing a full album, you belong here."
