Homeownership doesn't stop with the mortgage payment. It also includes utility bills - and we all know how those can add up. Medication can also be a hidden cost, if your home is contributing to health concerns such as asthma.

During this three-hour presentation, we'll help you understand how you can guide clients in decisions that can help them have a healthier, more comfortable, more affordable home. Lunch will be provided through an induction cooking demonstration.

Topics covered during this course include:

- How can heat pump HVACs and water heaters lower utility bills and improve indoor air quality?
- What is induction cooking, how does it work, and what the the benefits?
- What are additional cost-effective ways my clients can lower their utility bills?
- Why is California moving toward electrification, and what should I know to be prepared?
- Should I consider solar and battery backup?
- How do I find rebates and incentives to make switching to electric appliances more affordable?

This training is being paid for by Southern California Edison. Registration is required to attend.
