The Health Benefits Of Chlorophyll For Dogs

Your dog's desire to eat grass isn't as weird as you may think.

There are a few reasons dogs eat grass but one is because they need more nutrients ... or one specific nutrient. And that's chlorophyll. But even though grass has chlorophyll in it ... it's best used for lawn decoration and not as a food source.

Chlorophyll is a green pigment found in almost all plants and algae. What's really neat is ... the structure of chlorophyll is almost identical to hemoglobin. Hemoglobin is a component in your dog's red blood cells. It helps carry oxygen to all your dog's organs and cells. So when your dog eats chlorophyll, it replenishes his red blood cells. But you may have noticed the grass your dog eats usually comes out the way it did when it went in. That's because your dog can't digest the grass. And that means he doesn't get much of what he seeks ... chlorophyll. And lack of digestibility isn't even the biggest issue. You may keep your grass fresh and clean at home. But many of your neighbors and local parks may treat their grass with chemicals. And these lawn chemicals cause cancer in dogs.

The good news is you can provide your dog with digestible, healthy chlorophyll. One easy way to do this is to cut up 1 cup of green vegetables like the ones below ...

*Spinach

*Kale

*Parsley

*Chinese cabbage (Bok Choy)

You can also juice them (feed the pulp too) or steam them lightly. Once you have your greens ready, add them directly to your dog's meal. If your dog is a bit leery you can also mix them with other foods like Banana, Pure Pumpkin, or Yogurt. You can also get sneaky with treat toys, or ice cube trays for a frozen treat.

So now you know that when your dog grazes in your backyard, it's time to add some greens to his meals.

This just in from Bellona's dad Mark:

"I just got transferred to Japan and brought Bellona with me.

Does she hold the record for the furthest traveled Hoytt dobe?

She handled the long flight like a champion. She did a 10 hour flight with me from Seattle to Japan, I was able to take her out and run her a bit, then she flew another 4 hours to a final destination. We made it with no accidents in the cage, no destroyed bedding, and she remained in high spirits and still willing to jump back in her kennel every-time."
