TAIL WAGGING TIPS FOR YOU & YOUR DOG

Plenty of pet parents – and their dogs – are less than thrilled about the prospect of regular nail trimmings. But did you know that cutting your dog's nails is one of the most basic and effective things you can do to help maintain their joint and bone health? Especially as your dog enters their senior years and becomes more prone to joint diseases like arthritis, trimming their nails regularly – and often enough – is paramount to keeping unnecessary stress of their aging joints.

A dog's nails are important parts of their anatomy. Essentially, having long nails changes the way a dog carries themselves, which can cause damage to their skeletal system. A long nail causes the bones in their foot to flatten and the Metacarpal, Phalanx I, and Phalanx II bones to sit more angled every time the dog walks or stands.

The unnatural alignment in your dog's skeletal system caused by overly long nails feels similar to them as it would to you if you had to wear high heels...all the time. Plus, long nails can make it difficult for your pup to get a good grip as they walk along slick floors like hardwood or tile, which can already be difficult for a senior dog. Not to mention that long nails are more likely to get caught on things and torn off (ouch!) and are more prone to infection.

Luckily, all these issues are completely preventable with basic regular nail trimmings. As long as you follow the guidelines above for how often to cut their nails, you'll save your dog a world of unnecessary discomfort.

- A good rule of thumb is that you should trim your dog's nails as often as it takes to prevent their nails from touching the ground when they're standing.
- If you can hear your dog's nails clicking on the floor, they need to be trimmed.
- Dogs' front nails tend to grow faster than their back nails, so you may not need to cut their rear nails as frequently as their front ones.

And finally, try to keep an upbeat attitude about trimming your pup's nails. Dogs are incredibly in tune with their human companions, and if you dread clipping their nails, your dog will too. So try to look at it not as a terrible chore to get through but as a loving gesture that will spare your dog unnecessary pain and help keep them happy and healthy for life.
