Become an Expert Reviewer for the Spartan Medical Research Journal!

Peer Review is a critical component of scholarly publishing. Manuscripts submitted to the Spartan Medical Research Journal (SMRJ) are typically sent to two or three peer reviewers who are experts in the topic area of the manuscript.

SMRJ uses a single-blind review system - in other words, the authors are revealed to the reviewers, but the reviewers remain anonymous to the authors.

“I have been a peer reviewer for the American Journal of Gastroenterology and the journal of the American Osteopathic Association for several years and now, SMRJ. I believe peer reviewed articles are important since it brings more credibility to the articles to ensure accuracy, good content and high quality.” Peter Gulick, D.O.

“The SMRJ is a fantastic resource for community-based residency programs to disseminate and share research and quality-improvement/patient safety projects.” Nikolai Butki, D.O.

“I have enjoyed acting as a peer reviewer. It is of vital importance that we continue research for the improvement and knowledge it provides in the care of patients.” Jeffrey Mason, D.O.

“Being selected as a SMRJ reviewer carries prestige and responsibility. It forces me to make sure to stay current on literature pertaining to the topic I am reviewing as well as enhancing my teaching ability and personal scholarly activity.” Seilesk C. Babu, M.D.

If you would like to become a peer reviewer for SMRJ, please email the editorial office at: corser@msu.edu