

Understanding the Nature of Prejudice

Thursday, June 24 | 12:30 - 3:30 pm ET

Few would deny that the challenge of healing the racial divide in our nation is a major concern to most Americans. However, while racism afflicts the United States, many Americans are not aware that the issue of racism is a worldwide problem. The General Assembly of the United Nations declared “racism is a global problem” and stated, “flouting international law, racism pervades all countries.” (UN General Assembly, 2014)

Social researchers tell us that if we hope to eradicate racism and heal the racial divide, then it is imperative that we all learn more about the sociological and psychological forces that give rise to racial intolerance, implicit bias, microaggressions and xenophobia. This workshop is designed to give participants a comprehensive understanding of the nature of prejudice, its roots and its consequences.
