Description:

Dr. Giuseppe Raviola is an Assistant Professor of Psychiatry and Global Health and Social Medicine at Harvard Medical School (HMS). His work focuses on global mental health delivery, primarily as Director of Mental Health for Partners In Health (PIH), an international nongovernmental organization that builds health systems in close collaboration with ministries of health. Over the past decade, he has worked to integrate mental health services into the care provided at PIH sites by using a trans-national consultation model established on four pillars: sustained clinical supervision and mentorship to local providers; program implementation support and guidance to local managers; nimble use of quality improvement methods, data collection systems and technology integrated within local systems; and targeted research support to answer critical questions related to locally determined service delivery goals. PIH has innovated community-based systems of mental health care in Haiti, Lesotho, Liberia, Malawi, Mexico, Peru and Rwanda, and has developed a sustained cross-national learning collaborative in mental health care delivery. Within the Department of Global Health and Social Medicine at HMS, Dr. Raviola established the Dr. Mario Pagenel Fellowship in Global Mental Health Delivery, and co-directs a new course, Case Studies in Global Mental Health Delivery. He is newly appointed Associate Director of the Chester M. Pierce, MD Division of Global Psychiatry at Massachusetts General Hospital (MGH). Dr. Raviola received his MD from HMS in 2002 and completed his postgraduate training in psychiatry at MGH and McLean Hospital, and in child and adolescent psychiatry at Dartmouth-Hitchcock Medical Center.
