

Get to Know The Arc Central Chesapeake Region's CEO Jonathon Rondeau!

Jonathon Rondeau is the new Chief Executive Officer of The Arc Central Chesapeake Region. Growing up in Connecticut, he attended East Lyme High School around the time that Madeline Albright became the first female Secretary of State. Jonathon received his Bachelor's degree in rehabilitation counseling and disability studies from Springfield College before moving to Maryland to get his Master's degree in nonprofit management from Notre Dame of Maryland.

Jonathon was first drawn to The Arc by The Arc Central Chesapeake Region's long history of creating innovative and inclusive programs and the entrepreneurial spirit of the organization. While Jonathon believes it is too early in his tenure to focus on his legacy, he does have impressive plans for the future of The Arc Central Chesapeake Region. "My vision for The Arc Central Chesapeake is to build on our rich history of advocacy and services for people with disabilities, by expanding our reach in Anne Arundel County and the Eastern Shore, expanding innovative and inclusive community based programs and creative affordable housing options." Currently, he is very excited that The Arc Central Chesapeake Region is currently building their first custom and fully accessible home in Millersville. Jonathon looks forward to helping The Arc Central Chesapeake Region build, support, develop, and strengthen their direct support professional workforce through stronger wages and expanded professional development.

Jonathon lives in Baltimore with his husband and son. In his free time, he enjoys baking and spending time by the ocean. He also loves to travel and hopes one day to visit Fiji, where he can look out over the crystal clear waters of the South Pacific.

Welcome to The Arc family Jonathon!
