

New Publication Guidelines

Many, many more people are learning about Centenary and our ministry happenings through our newsletter and Facebook. And starting this fall, we will have an updated page on the website that will include our calendar and upcoming events - another great way to let people know all that is happening at Centenary.

To that end, we are encouraging ministry leaders and teams and anyone wishing to make an announcement to consider using these online communication methods and relying less on the bulletin or inserts. Of course, brief announcements are welcome for the bulletin. But more detailed and colorful announcements are perfect for our online communication methods. Laura Nealley, our administrative assistant, is available to help create announcements that will convey your event details beautifully and will work with you to determine the best way to share your information. Please reach out to her for help in deciding how best to communicate your message. (admin@centumc.org)

As we transition to more announcements being online, one guiding principle is that no personal information will be put on Facebook or the website. Announcements from the newsletter will be modified to adhere to this guideline.

Deadlines for announcements in the Friday newsletter and Sunday bulletin is Wednesday at noon. Facebook (and, very soon, the website) can be updated on an as-needed basis.
