Reflections on the Weekend Scriptures

1 Samuel 16:1b, 6-7, 10-13a / Ephesians 5:8-14 / John 9:1-41

- In today's first reading, the LORD asserts that God does not see how people see. We tend to see appearances, but God looks into the heart. How often do we find ourselves unable to see past appearances: the way someone looks, or sounds, or acts? In doing so, are we showing unconscious biases, prejudices, or assumptions? Let us not be like the Pharisees in the Gospel who become indignant when questioning the man who once was blind. They cannot see past their belief that the man must have been born in sin. Nor can they look past the fact that Jesus happened to heal this man on the sabbath. These preconceived judgments blind them to the wonders of God, revealed in Christ.
- The questioners in the Gospel think they have a good argument in their assertion that the formerly blind man was born totally in sin. What they fail to realize is that we all were born totally in sin. We all have inherited original sin. Moreover, we all are sinful creatures, susceptible to sin each and every day. Do we look at others who have sinned as less than us because their sin is worse or more visible? Does acting "holier than thou" help us feel better about ourselves? Can we challenge ourselves to look honestly at ourselves before criticizing or judging others?
- There is an especially tender moment in this Gospel passage, nestled inconspicuously in the aftermath of the cure. It's easy to miss, as it's just half of a verse in a selection that includes an entire chapter of John's Gospel. After the formerly blind man has the audacity to suggest that Jesus must be from God and the religious authorities respond by expelling him from the synagogue, John writes, "When Jesus heard that they had thrown him out, he found him . . ." (John 9:35). Here was a man who had been blind his entire life. An outcast from society, he used to sit and beg, likely often outside the synagogue. He would not have been welcome inside, since it was thought he or his parents must be sinful if he is blind. Then his whole life changed with a chance encounter with Jesus. But the authorities are unable to accept this sign from God and eventually he is excluded once again from the community he had been able to join for, maybe, only a day or two. When Jesus is told about this, he immediately goes and finds him. One imagines that he feels terrible that the timing of his healing caused this awful consequence. Perhaps he is justifiably angry at the religious authorities. But whatever the motivating factor, he feels compassion for the man he'd healed and wants to comfort him. And comfort him he did, for it is only then that he completes the cure for his blindness. The man's spiritual eyesight is fully realized as he desires to believe in the Son of Man and comes to know that Jesus is he.

Question of the Week

What are my blind spots? What biases do I have that distort the way I see others?

Am I willing to ask someone I know well to be honest with me?

Next Weekend's Readings

Feeding the Flock

Happy Saint Patrick's Day! As usual, it falls during the Season of Lent, which can always take the edge off any planned festivities, but it is a great time nonetheless. Celebrating 26 years as a parish and more than a parish, as a family.

Our parish began with just a few souls who quickly discovered us and a few followed me from my parish mission in Rehoboth, Ma. It was a time of high hopes as we began putting together the pieces of our parish and slowly more and more souls. Today, well off from the numbers we saw about 5 years in, nonetheless have replaced numbers with kind and caring members who understand what it means to be a Catholic in 2026.

I do wish to thank you all for your confidence in me as your pastor and for your presence and support going forward. Our staff right now is small, with both Deacon Noel and Felicia contributing to our weekly liturgies. Saint Patrick's began as an alternative Catholic parish and over the quarter century has effectively kept that same ideal God bless you all as we go forward on our combined journey to eternal life in Christ. Fr. Roger
