Blaydon-headquartered manufacturer Sure Purity Ltd has received a Queen's Award for Enterprise Recognising excellence in International Trade, the award will see the North East manufacturer named as one of 225 organisations nationally to be honoured with a prestigious Queen's Award for Enterprise.

Founded in 2016, Sure Purity manufactures carbon dioxide polishing filtration systems used by the beverage industry to prevent contamination of products. Using a unique technology, their system removes potentially harmful trace impurities from beverage grade carbon dioxide. With contamination resulting in off-flavours, smells and appearance of beverages, and in some instances even leading to food safety recalls, this technology addresses major global quality concerns in the beverage industry.

Founder and managing director, Gary Robson said: "Having worked in the global beverage industry for more than 25 years, it was my first-hand experience that led me to develop a business that could address industry concerns over reoccurring food safety issues that arise from contamination. For the first 18 months, we invested heavily in our research and development to create a product which could address this and were awarded a contract with two major global brands to develop technology which would support their own manufacturing.'
