Green Grass & Clear Water: A hands-on lawn care clinic

What does your lawn have to do with the water in Great Bay? More than you might think. Runoff from over-fertilized or poorly managed lawns is one of the leading contributors to nutrient pollution in our local rivers, lakes, and tidal waters — but a few simple changes in how you care for your grass can make a real difference.

This free outdoor clinic, hosted at the Great Bay National Estuarine Research Reserve, will walk you through proven techniques for growing a lush, resilient lawn without harming the watershed just downstream. Whether you're battling bare patches, dealing with compacted soil, or just looking to cut back on chemicals, this program is built for you.

Attendees will leave with practical knowledge they can put to use immediately, and every participant receives a free soil test kit to take the guesswork out of what your lawn actually needs.
