Class Description:

Not every child craves the spotlight and even fewer enjoy public speaking but the fact is, they all have a message to share and should feel empowered to share their message with confidence and conviction. At some point in their academic career, they'll be expected to do an oral presentation, in person or virtually - be it a book report, a school performance, receiving an award or any number of scenarios but unfortunately, public speaking skills are rarely taught in school. When presented with a public speaking event, will a child view it as an opportunity or a challenge - the right training, tips and practice for both in person and virtual communication can often prove to be the difference.
