

Answer: C

Benjamin Franklin

The first known proposal to adjust daily schedules for daylight came from Benjamin Franklin in 1784. While living in Paris, Franklin humorously suggested that people could save money on candles if they woke up earlier and used natural light instead. His essay was satirical, but the seed of an idea was planted: shift human routines to align with daylight and reduce waste.

