

Be Prepared, Not Paranoid! It's SUMMERTIME!

Summer is here! That means that many people are on the road, at shows, or getting ready for holiday festivities and visitors. It also means that we're edgy and anxious about what could happen. Whether your neighborhood is vulnerable to fire, storm, flood or quake – it's hard to sleep some nights worrying about the "What-ifs".

What's the best way to beat the stress of worrying about potential disaster? Be as ready as you can, within reason. Pick your priorities, make a checklist, and just tick items off one by one. Then go out and have an ice cream cone!

Here at HALTER HQ, we've spent the last few days dealing with fires near our ranches, tracking friends hit by flash floods, hearing about some hair-raising rescues on beaches and trails. All the while, the reminders of the October fires surround us, and are inescapable.

PREPAREDNESS IS EMPOWERING

even if your significant other tells you you're nuts. (Speaking from experience, they'll thank you later!)

We've been going through our notes, conversations, correspondence, and new resources to come up with a list of timely topics to help you (and us!) gain some preparedness advantages. We think you'll find that you feel calmer and better able to enjoy summer once you've boosted your planning and preparedness. We've provided some key links for info. Don't wait: Dive in!
