

Production Manager

Girl Meets Dirt has a fantastic salaried, benefited opportunity for a Production Manager to serve a dynamic role overseeing and managing all production related activities. This is an ideal position for a motivated, hard-working, hands on, entrepreneurial, production-experienced leader looking to grow with an exciting food company in a beautiful, active, island community. The Production Manager will serve on the Executive Team and contribute to strategy discussions.

The Production Manager is responsible for managing all aspects of production (from input sourcing & planning, prep & cooking to bottling & packaging), food safety, inventory management, ingredient sourcing & storage (coordinating with vendors & farmers), equipment, transportation logistics related to purchasing & sourcing, team onboarding and management, development & scheduling. While our process is still very handmade and uses old school techniques and copper pots, this role has accountability for advancing and sustaining continuous improvements to make and deliver our unique preserves in a more efficient, safe, and sustainable manner.

Success in this role relies not only on skills, knowledge, and endurance, but also on the ability to build relationships and fully engage all employees and vendor relationships in a business & community minded environment.

You do not need to know how to make jam but you must be a leader with extensive experience in cooking or product manufacturing and a keen sense for efficient processes. Applicable backgrounds could be commercial kitchen leadership and/or food manufacturing/management experience, pastry chef, sous chef with aptitude and desire to manage, learn and grow. To apply, please submit a resume and cover letter to jobs@girlmeetsdirt.com.