Individual

Marcy started sewing dresses in 2015. Marcy's daughter tells of watching her face light up with each dress she made and sorted by size, counted, folded into each box making sure each one was handled with special care.

A story for each one as she held them up and told her how each one was lovingly put together with just the right colorful fabrics. Some had special touches or unique appliques added to the pockets or her own hand stitched little bit of whimsy. She said this organization has given momma the gift of feeling as if she still has a purpose, a way to give back. Momma has been battling cancer for years, yet she still sews. She says she finds sewing peaceful and relaxing. She doesn't want any recognition for her works, She says just knowing there are little girls who love her dresses out there is enough for her.
