Founder, Real Estate of the Future

Founder, Women in PropTech

Nikki Greenberg is a futurist and thought leader in the real estate industry. Based in New York, she directs real estate developers and owners on ways to capitalize on PropTech and disruptive innovations to gain an edge in an ever-changing environment through her consultancy, Real Estate of the Future. Nikki entered the property industry through her established career in architecture working with real estate developer Lend Lease, and cutting-edge architect Koichi Takada in Sydney, Australia on projects ranging from luxury shopping malls to new master-planned communities.

Nikki is an alumni of UNSW in Sydney, Australia where she attained Masters of International Business, Masters of Architecture, and Bachelors of Architecture with honours. As both the current co-chair of the Urban Land Institute's New York Real Estate Technology and Innovation Council, and Founder and Global Ambassador of Women in PropTech, she has a strong focus on leveraging global insights and fostering collaboration.

She has been the recipient of numerous industry awards and accolades including being recognized as a Top 25 CRE Innovator (2021), Top 100 Real Estate Executive (2020), Finalist at MIPIM Global PropTech Awards (2019), Finalist at UK PropTech Awards (2019), and Finalist at REFI CRE US Awards (2019).

Nikki speaks passionately on topics of innovation, disruption, IoT, sustainability, design thinking, robots, and the future of the built environment. Today, she can be found speaking at leading real estate and innovation conferences around the world, in locations including London, Paris, Helsinki, New York, Washington DC, as well as virtually.
