

A community that stands out

When Hank Page started touring potential senior living communities, his first visit was to White Horse Village. After seeing several other locations, his mind kept returning to the bright, open campus in Newtown Square.

"The others just frankly didn't make the grade when you compared them to White Horse Village," Hank says.

He was looking for a "Goldilocks" situation, and feels he found it here.

"Some are too big, some are too formal. This has just the right feel." He's also been impressed with the team.

Hank was already familiar with a number of residents. He and his wife had lived in the area for many years before moving down to the Jersey Shore, and some of their connections through the community and Hank's career with Sunoco now live at White Horse Village.

They decided they wanted to return to the area to be closer to their children and their doctors, which is when they started looking around for a senior living community. After his wife's passing last year, Hank decided to go ahead with plans to move to White Horse Village.

"It just felt like a very welcoming place, with a lot of people walking around with smiles on their faces," he says.

He has settled into an apartment adjoining the Clubhouse, which he likes because it's convenient for dining and many activities. "I've been here for six months now, and the more I learn about it, the better I like it — the more I'm sure I made the right decision," Hank says.

Hank still gets down to the Shore and stays busy, but likes that there's plenty to do on campus as well. He's knocked down a few virtual pins in Wii bowling and joined in the highly competitive bocce games. Residents have the option to get involved in as much or as little as they want, and Hank likes that. "It's such a nice, relaxed lifestyle."

He suggests that people not wait too long to sign up if they are looking for a continuing care retirement community, as the best locations, White Horse Village included, have waiting lists. "I would definitely recommend that anybody who is looking for a CCRC consider White Horse Village."

To find out more about joining the Priority Club, reach out to a sales counselor today.