Support for Students, by Students

Tutor Jackets for Northwestern Middle School & Milton High School

Tutor Jackets is a virtual tutoring and mentorship organization founded by Vishesh Gattani, a proud alum of Northwestern Middle School (Class of 2014) and Milton High School (Class of 2018). After graduating with a Bachelor's and Master's in mechanical engineering from Georgia Tech, Vishesh began his professional career at Procter & Gamble as a manufacturing process engineer. However, his long-standing passion for tutoring, which began with Beta Club and ESOL support as a middle and high school student, inspired him to launch Tutor Jackets during his master's program.

Tutor Jackets connects top-performing Georgia Tech students - studying engineering, computer science, business, and other STEM fields - with middle and high schoolers seeking academic support and guidance. The focus goes beyond tutoring: mentors to help younger students understand schoolwork in math, science, coding, and also see how these subjects can shape their futures. Designed to help students feel like they have an experienced older sibling guiding the way, the model was built to provide "Support for Students, by Students".

This organization has been serving families across the Greater Atlanta Suburbs for over two years, and Vishesh is hoping to expand awareness of Tutor Jackets within the NMS and MHS communities - where his own journey began.
