The GreatSchools.org College Success Award has allowed many communities to identify and celebrate their local schools that are doing well in ensuring every student is prepared for college, and greatly succeeding once they get there. On average, 86 percent of students from College Success Award-winning schools do not require remediation in college.

Cynthia McCarty, Ph.D.
District VI

Since this national initiative was started, school principals, superintendents, and governors have shared the exciting news about the laudable achievements of their local public high schools and students.

Belinda McRae
District VII

The College Success Award also focuses on educational equity, recognizing schools that excel at preparing K-12 students from lower income households.

Wayne Reynolds, Ed.D.
District VIII
Vice President

With an estimated 70 percent of all jobs by 2027 possibly requiring a postsecondary education, more experts now feel America’s students will need to not only graduate high school, but also be well-positioned to go on to postsecondary learning opportunities.

Eric G. Mackey, Ed.D.
Secretary and Executive Officer

According to information from GreatSchools.org, nearly 77 percent of parents now find it essential for their children to go to college.
