

Infectious Disease Division Chief

Drexel University College of Medicine - PHILADELPHIA

The Department of Medicine at Drexel University College of Medicine is seeking an academic Division Chief to lead the clinical, research and educational activities for the Division. Philadelphia is a vibrant, urban setting with outreach to a robust immigrant as well as vulnerable populations. The Division has strong basic and clinical research programs with expertise in HIV, HCV, C diff, vaccine development, transplant and emerging infections. The Division operates the largest HIV clinic in the Philadelphia area. The successful Division Chief should have excellent interpersonal skills and an established track record of scholarship. We seek an accomplished physician with strong skills in mentoring, strategic thinking, growing clinical programs and contributing to innovation in healthcare delivery.

Qualified applicants must have a demonstrated capacity to support the section's clinical, research and education efforts, fostering an environment that will help the faculty members, the division and the Department flourish including building collaborative relationships across departments and the Drexel enterprise. A record of effective administrative leadership, experience promoting a diverse workforce, and positive interactions with students, faculty, and staff are required.

We seek excellent candidates and encourage talented clinicians-including women and those underrepresented in medicine to apply.

Send CV or nominations to: Lia Logio, M.D., Professor of Medicine, at ls145@drexel.edu.
