

Cape Fear Valley Health System (CFVHS), a six-hospital, $1.1 billion healthcare system in Fayetteville, North Carolina, seeks a dynamic, transformative and experienced physician leader who is passionate about quality and safety to serve as its next Chief Quality Officer (CQO). This individual will be the catalyst to developing and leading a comprehensive quality and safety program and creating a culture of clinical excellence within CFVHS.

Working across a complex and matrixed healthcare system, the CQO will be responsible for establishing a vision, strategy and structure to drive performance improvement and transformation. This leader will develop a program that is proactive in analyzing quality metrics to improve standards of care, while creating policy and procedures to promote a strategic and transparent approach to quality and continuous improvement within the System. The CQO will partner with the Chief Medical Officer, along with clinical and administrative leaders across the organization to drive innovative and strategic efforts to advance CFVHS on its journey to becoming a high reliability organization.

The successful candidate will be a physician with a proven track-record of creating and implementing quality initiatives within a matrixed health system. The candidate must have extensive knowledge and training in process improvement and a dedication to utilizing data to drive system-based improvements through structure and technology. They will champion an evidence-based approach to continue CFVHS's focus on leading in quality and safety.

An MD/DO degree (or equivalent) is required along with completion of postgraduate medical education in an ACGME-accredited residency program with current Board Certification in their specialty. An advanced degree in healthcare management, informatics, or quality is desired.

The ideal candidate will be a transparent, visible and effective leader who is able to communicate and develop a culture of collaboration across the organization. The candidate should be one who promotes partnership and trust.
