

Chief of Hematology and Oncology

Los Angeles General Medical Center (LAGMC) invites applications and nominations for the position of Chief of Hematology and Oncology. This is a unique and transformative opportunity to lead a growing division within one of the nation's largest public teaching hospitals, renowned for its commitment to serving diverse and underserved populations.

The new Chief will be a visionary, nationally recognized leader in hematology and oncology with a demonstrated passion for clinical excellence, innovative care models, and health equity. This leader will be responsible for shaping the division's future by recruiting top-tier faculty, advancing research, and promoting the highest quality patient care. The ideal candidate will have a proven track record of mentorship, collaboration, and fostering academic achievement.

LAGMC is a 600-bed public teaching hospital with a rich history dating back to 1878. It is a vital hub for medical education, research, and patient care, serving as a flagship for the second-largest public health system in the United States. The hospital's academic mission is deeply integrated into its culture, with over 900 residents and fellows in training and groundbreaking research initiatives in oncology, health services, and care delivery.

The Chief of Hematology and Oncology will report to the Chief of Medicine and lead efforts to elevate the division's performance across clinical care, education, and research. The division manages a high-volume clinical service, including acute leukemia care and outpatient oncology clinics. LAGMC's commitment to innovation includes exploring team-based care models, expanding care-at-home programs, and increasing participation in clinical trials for underserved populations.

In this highly visible role, the Chief will build on the division's success while fostering partnerships with LAGMC's academic affiliate, driving interdisciplinary collaboration, and ensuring a thriving environment for faculty, students, and trainees.

To ensure full consideration, inquiries, nominations and applications should be submitted electronically in confidence, to: c/o: Chanel.Smith@kornferry.com