

Duke University invites nominations and applications for the position of Dean of the Duke University School of Medicine.

The dean at Duke leads one of the nation's most distinguished, integrated schools of medicine, with highly developed research, teaching and clinical healthcare missions. Duke constantly improves in every dimension, looks to the future and expects both innovation and success. The next dean will join an institution with the highest aspirations at a time of tremendous momentum. The dean's overarching work will be to lead an education program that is transforming, to accelerate research and its translation, and to sustain a place where faculty, staff, students, and trainees thrive and are valued. The dean will also work closely with Duke Health leadership to advance the patient care mission of delivering tomorrow's healthcare today, as well as the population health improvement mission of building healthy communities.

The Duke University School of Medicine comprises 22 clinical and basic science departments and numerous centers and institutes. The School consists of approximately 2,200 faculty, 6,000 staff, 1,700 medical and PhD students, and 1,000 residents and fellows. The School's strong emphasis on research, and its commitment to diversity, inclusion, and interdisciplinary science, encourage collaborations among faculty members, departments, and other schools at the university. The successful candidate will envision and execute creative programs that ensure Duke's continued place among the foremost leaders in academic medicine.

The Duke University School of Medicine has prospered in every dimension and in all of its missions. The university seeks a dean equal to the School's history and its ambitions. The dean reports to the chancellor, is a senior officer of the university, and plays a central role in a full range of academic and strategic deliberations. The successful dean candidate will be a visionary and energetic leader who has achieved at the highest level of academic distinction. Competitive candidates for dean will also have demonstrated an appreciation for all of Duke's mission areas, a stellar record of building innovative programs, a proven ability to manage in a dynamic and complex environment typical of a research-intensive institution, and a penchant for nurturing people and creating a supportive environment.
