The Senior Associate Dean for Educational Performance will provide leadership for academic matters including strengthening and advancing School of Medicine competency-based performance of clinical skills, student professionalism, and student advising. The Senior Associate Dean analyzes findings from these activities and reports on areas where improvements can be made. The Senior Associate Dean for Educational Performance will also actively participate in the School of Medicine's curriculum development and delivery. Additional responsibilities include reviewing and aligning School of Medicine policies and procedures across Academic Affairs, serving a primary role for all educational performance data reporting, and working to improve the overall academic profile by working with Academic Affairs' staff.

The Senior Associate Dean will have a MD or MD/PhD degree and a minimum of 10 years of experience in medical student education and curriculum development. A record of successful innovation and previous School of Medicine administrative leadership experience at the level of Assistant or Associate Dean are essential.
