Associate Dean for Faculty Affairs, UNLV School of Nursing

The University of Nevada, Las Vegas (UNLV) announces a national search for Associate Dean of Faculty Affairs, Associate/Full Professor, UNLV School of Nursing. The School of Nursing at UNLV offers CCNE-accredited programs leading to a BSN, MS (nurse practitioner and nurse educator tracks), DNP, and PhD (Educator and Interprofessional Health concentrations and DNP to PhD).

The new Associate Dean for Faculty Affairs will have responsibility for faculty and resource issues within the UNLV School of Nursing. He/she provides leadership in faculty development and evaluation consistent with the mission, strategic goals and objectives of the School of Nursing.

The Associate Dean will serve as an effective spokesperson to interface among faculty members, institute and department chairs, and appropriate departmental committees. The successful candidate will have experience facilitating understanding of the appointments and promotions process by faculty members, chairs, and administrators.

The Associate Dean will be an emotionally intelligent academic leader with oversight of mentoring programs for the development of talented faculty members with primary appointments in the School of Nursing. H/she will institute a faculty mentorship program in order to maximize academic accomplishments, leadership potential, educational innovation, and areas of feasible research productivity.

Candidates will hold master's degree from an accredited college or university in nursing and a doctorate in nursing or a related field from an accredited college or university. The individual must also hold or be qualified to hold a Nevada RN license. This position may be filled by an Associate Professor or Full Professor with tenure, holding a record of externally-funded research. The successful candidate will demonstrate support for diversity, equity and inclusiveness as well as participate in maintaining a respectful, positive work environment.
