

Division Head of General Internal Medicine and Geriatrics
Oregon Health & Science University

Oregon Health & Science University is conducting a search to appoint the next Division Head of General Internal Medicine and Geriatrics.

The Division of General Internal Medicine and Geriatrics (DGMIG) is a vibrant division with faculty whose contributions are essential to training, advancing science, and a healthy population. Highly visible across OHSU and the community and larger than many departments, the Division is marked by a culture of collegiality and commitment and has undergone dynamic growth in programs, research activity, and collaborations with other units at OHSU. It is home to a group of outstanding physicians, nurse practitioners, researchers, physician associates, and educators who are dedicated to serving the people of Oregon. Division faculty have active research program focused on improving the health and healthcare of primary care patients and vulnerable populations.

The Division is comprised of four sections that collaborate on teaching and training, research, and clinical care: Addiction Medicine, General Internal Medicine, Geriatrics, as well as Health Promotion and Sports Medicine. With 95+ faculty. The Division Head has overall responsibility for strategy, operations, and people leadership. The dynamic and experienced physician should have a record of substantive contributions to the fields represented in the Division and to the health of communities. The Division Head will champion the careers of faculty, drive program development with and for the community and its partners, and be the voice of general internal medicine (GIM) across the enterprise.

The Department of Medicine seeks an inspirational, driven Division Head of General Internal Medicine and Geriatrics to lead a storied Division to continue its trajectory of growth. OHSU is committed to growth and innovation; this Division Head will be one of several new leaders shaping a culture of excellence and collaboration in the Department. This is the opportunity to pursue growth in research, clinical services, and education programs across the medical school, health system and allied clinics, and the community.

OHSU Department of Medicine is a cornerstone of the health sciences center. Its research, clinical scope, and training programs are interwoven throughout the School, Institutes, and health system. Notably, it is the academic home of faculty affiliated with the Knight Cardiovascular Institute and Knight Cancer Institute. With over 700 faculty, the Department houses 11 Divisions and two Institutes, and provides the most comprehensive, subspecialized internal medicine care in the state and supports a vibrant academic ecosystem that is dedicated to its missions. The Department's leadership has prioritized high impact scholarship, patient access, service growth, and the intentional recruitment and development of exceptional faculty.

Candidates must have capability to lead all the Division's missions in a complex academic institution; knowledge of the clinical environment and ability to leverage opportunities to expand care and reduce health disparities; accomplishments advancing science. A record of recruiting, developing, and retaining clinicians and investigators is crucial. Strong mentoring experience and record of successful trainees. M.D./D.O. or M.D./Ph.D. or international equivalent terminal degree with board certification in the Division's focus areas. Candidates must be eligible for licensure in Oregon.
