

Chief of Infectious Disease | Oregon Health and Science University | Portland, Oregon

Merritt Hawkins is assisting in recruiting an academic leader to serve as the next Chief of the Division of Infectious Diseases in the Department of Medicine. The next Division Chief will have a strong history of research, academic leadership, and a commitment to excellence in education and clinical care.

Some Highlights of The Position Are:

- Opportunity to grow an existing clinical program and build an ID research program
- Ability to hire faculty
- Established fellowship program in place
- Lab package available including recruiting resources
- Excellent salary and benefit package
- Generous protected research and administrative time

Qualifications

Candidates must hold an M.D., M.D./Ph.D., or equivalent degree from an accredited medical school, ABIM board certification and recertification if applicable; academic accomplishments that would merit appointment at the associate professor or professorial level in the tenure system; relevant administrative experience; and evidence of effective interpersonal skills. The successful candidate will have a record of federal funding, promote research collaborations across the University and the community, attract and develop qualified faculty, oversee clinical activities of the division, and enhance the education of medical students, Internal Medicine Residents and Infectious Disease Fellows.

Work and Live In Downtown Portland—Benefit From:

- Centralized clinic locations to all of Portland
- Experience city living in the great Pacific Northwest
- Access to tremendous restaurants and activities
- Trail Blazers, Timbers, and multiple college teams around the area
- 3 hours away from Seattle
- International airport with access to the entire U.S.

To learn more or to connect with a recruiter, email Kim Zeigler kim.zeigler@merritthawkins.com or call 855-824-6680.

Please reference CID-55206E on all responses.