

Chief Scientific Officer and Director of The Saban Research Institute Children's Hospital Los Angeles

Children's Hospital of Los Angeles (CHLA) has initiated an international search for the Chief Scientific Officer (CSO) and Director for The Saban Research Institute (TSRI) of Children's Hospital of Los Angeles. CHLA seeks an innovative and highly collaborative investigator to provide management leadership and strategic direction for TSRI and contribute as a member of CHLA's leadership team.

The CSO/Director will be responsible for guiding the growth and development of the Institute's highly regarded programs, taking full advantage of CHLA's extraordinary faculty and resources. CHLA, one of the largest and most respected independent children's hospitals in the U.S., was ranked 6th nationally in the 2017 U.S. News & World Report Best Children's Hospitals National Ranking and has been repeatedly listed on the Honor Roll since its inception. One of the fastest growing children's research centers in the U.S., TSRI is also consistently ranked among the top 10 in NIH funding among free-standing children's hospitals and is poised for growth with significant investment planned for its basic, clinical and translational research programs.

Candidates will have an M.D. or Ph.D. degree (or both) and will have served in a leadership role within a school of medicine or a research institute. The ideal candidate is an accomplished investigator respected for excellence in research related to diseases in childhood and nationally recognized as a scholar. S/he will be an academic leader qualified for appointment as Professor at Keck School of Medicine at the University of Southern California. CHLA and the University of Southern California have enjoyed a long-standing academic relationship built on a shared commitment to excellence in learning, discovery and collaboration.

The Academic Health Center Practice of Korn Ferry is assisting CHLA with this important search. Please forward, as soon as possible, your application, including letter of interest, or nominations of highly qualified candidates to:
