

The KASF Narrative Series was developed to provide members of the Korean American community with structured support in crafting strong narratives for college, graduate school, and job applications. The program consisted of three sessions, each addressing a critical stage of the writing process:

1. Session 1 – Discovering and Drafting the Narrative

Led by Angelina Jenkins, a doctoral student in the Higher Education, Student Affairs, & International Education Policy Ph.D. program at the University of Maryland and Assistant Director at UMBC's Mosaic: Center for Cultural Diversity, this session focused on helping participants identify their personal stories and begin putting words on paper. The session emphasized self-reflection, storytelling, and creating authentic first drafts.

2. Session 2 – Building First Drafts and Evaluating Structure

Led by Chaeyeon Park, KASF WRC Intern, who holds a Master's in Literary Editing and Publishing and is a Doctoral Fellow at USC, this session guided participants through the process of building their first drafts and learning how to evaluate structure, tone, and message using self-guided tools.

3. Session 3 – Editing for Precision and Professionalism

Led by Jennie Shin, KASF Program Committee Chair and Communications Specialist, this final session provided tools for detailed editing, including grammar, punctuation, and word choice. Participants also worked on conciseness and tone to produce polished statements ready for submission.

Overall Outcomes

The Narrative Series equipped participants with the skills and confidence to effectively communicate their experiences and aspirations in written form. Through instruction, guided practice, and peer engagement, KASF empowered students and professionals to present themselves more effectively in applications for college, graduate programs, and career opportunities.
