Early ENDS Substitution May Predict Risk Mitigation, but Only in Heavy Smokers: Implications for Trial Design

James Sargent, MD, is the Scott M. and Lisa G. Stuart Professor of Pediatric Oncology at the Geisel School of Medicine at Dartmouth. A pediatrician and behavioral epidemiologist, he studies e-cigarettes as both a risk to adolescents, who face higher odds of later cigarette smoking, and a possible harm-reduction tool for adults who smoke. He is a founding scientific advisor for the PATH Study and co-investigates an NIDA-funded trial of e-cigarette provision for smokers with serious mental illness.
