WE'D LOVE YOUR HELP...

To protect and promote Bermuda's unique natural and cultural heritage forever

FOR THE LOVE OF BERMUDA AND ALL THINGS BERMUDIAN

Natural Heritage

With over 277 acres of open space in our care, including wetland, woodland, coastline and farmland, the Bermuda National Trust plays a critical role as a steward of Bermuda's natural heritage. We hold this land in trust for the Bermuda community and for the conservation of Bermuda's unique biodiversity.

The majority of our land is open to the public as nature reserves, including places of natural beauty and environmental significance such as Spittal Pond and Paget Marsh, Sherwin Nature Reserve in Warwick and Gilbert Nature Reserve in Sandys. They are places where wildlife such as birds, butterflies and bees can thrive, where people can enjoy time in nature for their physical and mental well-being, and where children can learn to love Bermuda's environment.

Education and Advocacy

Over its 50-year history, the Bermuda National Trust has become respected for its robust advocacy for Bermuda's natural and cultural heritage, whether fighting to save open space from development, or arguing for the preservation of historic buildings at risk.

Every year, our education programmes connect hundreds of local children with the island's rich past, as well as its natural history, so that they can learn to appreciate the value of our heritage. Through field trips and experiential learning, we seek to inspire Bermuda's children to become the stewards of the future.

Cultural Heritage

We believe a community draws strength from its shared cultural heritage. That's why we seek to preserve special places of historic and architectural interest, to share the stories of the people who lived and worked there, and trace Bermuda's development from the past to the present. The Trust owns and cares for 35 historic buildings, including three that are open as museums displaying an outstanding collection of cedar furniture, silver, paintings and artefacts owned and made by Bermudians.

But heritage is not just about history. We are also engaged in the ongoing process of recognizing and celebrating the diversity of our backgrounds and experiences so that we can take the best from the past and reimagine a better future for Bermuda.
