

Obion County Chamber executive recognized with inaugural designation

Lindsay Theobald was recently recognized by the Tennessee Chamber of Commerce Executives who established the Tennessee Chamber of Commerce Executive Designation Program to recognize the professional competence of chamber of commerce executives in the State of Tennessee.

UNION CITY, TN — Lindsay Theobald, CEO of the Obion County Chamber, was recently recognized as one of the first seven chamber executives to receive an inaugural designation from the state.

The Tennessee Chamber of Commerce Executives established the Tennessee Chamber of Commerce Executive Designation Program to “recognize the professional competence of chamber of commerce executives in the State of Tennessee,” according to a recent release.

“We are thrilled to recognize Lindsay and the Obion County Chamber for their outstanding contributions to our chamber community,” said Suzie Lusk, vice president of events & external affairs for the Tennessee Chamber of Commerce, in the release. “Their dedication to excellence sets a high standard for chamber executives across our state.”

The designation is based on experience, service to TCCE, training, continuing education and professional achievement. Recipients receive professional certification that can be included in their profile, biography and resume.

"Empowered by passion, driven by purpose, and fueled by the spirit of service, I embrace the privilege of serving my community through the chamber industry, particularly with the Obion County Chamber." Theobald said. "Every day presents a new opportunity to make a meaningful impact and forge connections that extend beyond our county borders. It's about more than just professional achievement; it's about fostering collaboration and growth statewide, enriching lives and communities throughout Tennessee."
