Review: Schulman and Pops take wild ride down Broadway

Noisy babies, an empty water glass, a malfunctioning microphone and a massive roster of Broadway numbers no man in his right mind ever would attempt to sing in one night. These were the challenges facing tenor Craig Schulman. Like the lunatic souls he brought to life -- Don Quixote, the Phantom, the Beast, Dr. Jekyll -- Schulman set for himself a course of diabolical difficulty. And, like the courageous characters he also assumed -- Quixote, the Cowardly Lion, Jean Valjean and more -- Schulman emerged victorious... This tenor has talent in abundance. Schulman's clarion, opera-quality tone made his Lancelot ("C'est Moi" from "Camelot") delightfully insufferable, his Sky Masterson ("Luck Be A Lady" from "Guys and Dolls") magnetic, his Coalhouse Walker ("Make Them Hear You" from "Ragtime") noble... stirring in "Into The Fire" from "The Scarlet Pimpernel" and more humorously in "If I Were King of the Forest" from "The Wizard of Oz."

And when this remarkable hit parade had passed by, Schulman still had the energy -- and the chops -- for one of the most punishing show soliloquies ever, "The Confrontation" from "Jekyll & Hyde." For lovers of Broadway, both today and yesterday, this was an unforgettable evening. Good thing Schulman was crazy enough to try it.
