

Candidates for Election to the Board of the Johnson County UNA, October 2025

Candidates for First Two-Year Terms on the Board (2025-2027)

My name is Jenna Eastman. I am a social studies teacher at Iowa City High School. At City High I coach our school's Mock Trial team and oversee our Model United Nations program. Additionally, I have partnered with a global education travel company to bring students on an educational trip to Europe this upcoming summer. I am interested in joining the board of the Johnson County United Nations Association Board to promote the work and values of the United Nations at the local level and encourage the youth to get involved.

My name is Sara Haroun, and my work as a project manager with The Resilient Sustainable Future Iowa City is driven by a belief in justice, dignity, and sustainability for all. I am especially engaged in global issues like climate change and human rights, while uplifting the role of youth and community leadership. Guided by humility and inclusivity, I see the United Nations' mission as a powerful tool to shape a better future together.

Stefanie P.K. Munsterman, MBA, MSL (She/Her) recently attended the UNA Leadership Summit in Washington, D.C., where she engaged in congressional advocacy for sustained U.S. support of the United Nations. She is a consultant who guides organizations through complex legal and social landscapes, develops impactful policies, and fosters inclusive workplaces and communities. She also serves as an Adjunct Professor in graduate programs at a local university and holds certifications in mediation, mindfulness, meditation, and yoga instruction. Previously, she served as Executive Director of the Cedar Rapids Civil Rights Commission, championing equity and justice, and continues to serve on several boards and advisory councils, including the U.S. Commission on Civil Rights - Iowa Advisory Board and the ACLU of Iowa, while also volunteering as a Sexual Assault Advocate. Her service has been recognized with numerous awards, including Woman of the Year, Woman of Influence, and the ACLU of Iowa's Louise Noun Award. Currently completing her Master of International Policy and Practice at The George Washington University, she is deepening her focus on global governance and development and looks forward to contributing to JC-UNA's mission through outreach, partnerships, and thoughtful board service.

Sarah Terlouw worked internationally for much of her career, partnering with the various UN agencies throughout her years overseas. Sarah is currently the Executive Director with the International Rescue Committee (IRC) in Iowa but previously worked with the IRC in conflict and post-conflict settings. Sarah led the implementation of UN-funded programs including from WHO, UNICEF, UNFPA, UNDP and more throughout her career. Sarah represented her organization and presented on humanitarian imperatives at UN meetings in both Geneva and New York and was consistently a NGO representative at UNOCHA coordination meetings across all countries where she was based. As such, Sarah brings both personal interest and professional experience partnering with the UN to promote and engage on critical global issues. “I’m interested in joining the board to stay engaged in supporting global priorities. I value international diplomacy.”

My name is Claudia Suazo, and I am originally from Chile. From an early age, I have been actively involved as a volunteer in initiatives led by Catholic and governmental organizations that support vulnerable children, homeless individuals, migrants, and women in need within my community. These experiences inspired me to pursue a degree in Social Work. During my university years, I was elected chair of a student-led organization dedicated to supporting Indigenous communities. After graduating and relocating to Iowa City, I continued to pursue my passion for community service by volunteering in various initiatives that benefit vulnerable groups. I would like to join the United Nations Association of Johnson County and contribute to its activities and projects. I believe that my background and experience can be a valuable resource in promoting the organization's social objectives. I see this opportunity to continue growing on a personal and social level.
