GURU ANGAD PUBLIC SCHOOL IN DELHI

Most of the children TIG supports in Delhi attend Guru Angad Public School. Guru Angad is a Sikh school founded in 1982 and all of the TIG supported children who attend it are Hindu. By Indian law, public schools cannot discriminate by religion or caste.

Principal Manpreet Kaur & TIG President, Paul Ramsey

Determining which school the children attend is a collaborative decision between TIG and their parents. We prefer schools that are in close proximity to where our families live so transportation isn't an issue and parents can easily attend school events and conferences. We want teachers and administrators who treat the children and their parents with respect despite the family's caste or religion. If possible, we look for schools that have a pre-school through 12th grade education to provide consistency. We prefer low student teacher ratios (Guru Angad has a ratio of 24:1). And we want schools that cooperate by providing us as much information as possible during our visits on the progress of the children. Such is the case with Guru Angad Public School in Delhi.

The school is an English medium school offering most of its instruction in English though classes are also offered in Hindi and Punjabi as well as a full curriculum of science, math and history. In high school, students choose between a science, business or humanities track in preparation for university or work. All of the Delhi children are currently in elementary grades, however, thirteen-year-old Rohit, the oldest of the Delhi children, will be in high school in the next few years and he will hopefully become our first Delhi high school graduate.
