Preserving the Past, Protecting the Present: Why Historic Homes Deserve Window Tinting

Historic homes are more than just buildings—they're living legacies. From ornate millwork to original glass panes, every detail tells a story. But preserving that charm doesn't mean you have to sacrifice comfort, energy efficiency, or protection. That's where modern window tinting—especially SunTek's UltraVision series—steps in.

Why Tinting Makes Sense for Historic Homes

- 1. Preserve Original Windows Without Replacing Them Replacing antique windows can be costly and may violate preservation guidelines. Window tinting offers a non-invasive solution that enhances performance while keeping the original glass intact. It's a win for both aesthetics and authenticity.
- 2. Block Harmful UV Rays Historic interiors often feature delicate fabrics, woodwork, and artwork. Tinting blocks up to 99% of UV rays, helping prevent fading and deterioration—without drawing the curtains on natural light.
- 3. Improve Energy Efficiency Older homes weren't built with modern insulation in mind. Window tinting helps regulate indoor temperatures by reducing solar heat gain. That can mean 25–30% lower energy costs.
- 4. Reduce Glare Without Losing Character Glare from sunlight can make rooms uncomfortable and hard to enjoy. Tinting softens harsh light while maintaining the historic look of your windows—no shiny films or mirrored finishes required.
- 5. Stay Code-Compliant and Preservation-Friendly The U.S. Department of the Interior even recommends window film as a sustainable upgrade for historic buildings, provided it doesn't alter the building's character.

Why We Recommend SunTek UltraVision

SunTek's UltraVision DS series is tailor-made for homeowners who want performance without compromise:

- Spectrally Selective Technology: Blocks heat and UV while allowing natural light to pass through.
- Low Reflectivity: Maintains the original look of your windows—inside and out.
- Non-Corrosive Materials: Ideal for older frames and sensitive finishes.
- Barely Visible Appearance: Keeps your home's historic charm front and center.
- Manufacturer's Warranty: Peace of mind with long-term protection.

Whether you're restoring a Creole cottage or a home on St. Charles, UltraVision offers a subtle, effective way to modernize without erasing history. Window tinting isn't just about comfort—it's about honoring the past while embracing the future. With the right film, you can protect your home's legacy, reduce your energy bills, and enjoy every sunlit room without worry.
